EN ROUTE TO SOUTHAMPTON

FROM THE NAVIGATOR

After departure yesterday we transited the busy Gibraltar Strait. Throughout the transit we experienced predominantly east flowing currents, which hindered our progress through the strait and only eased once we were well clear, by Cape Trafalgar. Throughout the day we will be paralleling the Portuguese coast. Sediment samples from below the deep seafloor of the Mediterranean Sea, which include minerals, soils, and fossil plants, show that about 5.9 million years ago in the late Miocene period the precursor of the modern Strait of Gibraltar closed tight, and the Mediterranean Sea evaporated into a deep dry basin with a bottom at some places 2 to 3 miles (3.2 to 4.9 km) below the world ocean level. Even now the Mediterranean is saltier than the North Atlantic because of its near isolation by the Straits of Gibraltar and its high rate of evaporation. If the Strait of Gibraltar closes again, which is likely to happen in the near geological future (though extremely distant on a human time scale), the Mediterranean would evaporate completely in about a thousand years.
